

The smoking gun is rarely a gun.

Almost no one is caught the way the movies promise. What catches a killer, nearly every time, is smaller and quieter: the one thing he forgot he left behind.

Forty-three true cases from Canadian and American courts, each undone by a single thread of evidence, and each anchored to a real court decision you can look up yourself.

Inside you'll meet:

- The man who handed police the hairs that convicted him, because they asked nicely
- A wife reported dead, contradicted by the Fitbit on her own wrist
- A phone that photographed the inside of a pocket on the way to a murder
- A bullet that cleared the man everyone saw firing, and found the shooter no one was watching
- The stagers, the stings, the junk science, and the innocent it took decades to free

Every case is real. Everything remembers now.
